MRS. JUDGE JENKINS.

HING THE ONLY SENSINE SEQUEL TO "MAUD MUTLER." Mand Muller all that summer day Baked the meadows sweet with hay; Yet, looking down the distant lane. She hoped the Judge would come again. But when he came with smile and bow. Mand only blashed and stammered "Ha-o-wi" And speke of her "pa," and wondered whether He'd give consent they should wed together. Old Maller burst in tears, and then Begged that the Judge would lend him "ten." For trade was dall, and wages low, And the "craps" this year were somewhat slow. And ere the languid summer died, Sweet Mand became the Judge's bride. But on the day that they were mated, Mana's prother Ben was intoxicated; And Mand's relations, twelve in all, Were very drunk in the Judge's hall And when the summer came again, The young bride bore him babies twain. And the Judge was blest, and thought it stran That bearing children made such a change , For Mand grew board, and red and stout, And the walat-that his access clusped about Was more than he now could span, and he Sighed as he poundered, ruefully, How that, which in Mand was surfive grace, In Mrs. Jenkins was out of place. And thought of the twins, and wished that they Looked less like the man that raked the hay On Muller's farm, and dreamed with pain Of the day he wandered down the lane: And looking down the dreary track, He half regretted that he came back; For had be waited he might have wed Some maiden fair and thorough-bred. For there be women fair as she, Whose verbs and nouns do more agree Alas for maiden, alas for Judge, For the scatimental—that's one-half "fudge," For Mand soon thought the Judge a bore, With all his learning, and his lore. And the Judge would have bar leved Mand's fair face. For more refinement and social grace. If, of all words of tongue and pen. The saddest are those, "It might have been." More mid are those that we daily see,
"It is, but it haden't ought to be."

THREE brothers, the eldest of whom not over twelve years old, living near Harmon's Station, on the Cincinnati and Indianapolis Railroad, have been in the habit of lying between the ties of the road and incurring the terrible risk of having a train pass over them at full speed. They repeated this recently, at sad cost, with the passenger train run by Conductor George Drain. This train, ent of Cincinnati, was running along at the usual speed, when the engineer happened to discover three little human orms curled up in holes between the ties, just as the engine was within a few varids of them. There was no chance to stop the train until it had passed over them, and proceeded some distance further. The officers of the train then returned to the spot and found the three hildren terribly bruised.
